This project was born again with the help of amusewiki software and a file hosting project run by the owner of anarchistlibraries.net.

We have also added a library section in order to for example archive books analysing this projects yippie anarchist roots.

As one PDF, the website is almost 1,200 pages long, but every wiki page has a linked PDF that can be printed as it's own zine. There's also a book builder feature for people who want to combine various wiki pages together into their own custom zine.

So, hopefully we can build up a small contributor base of people wanting to archive various pamphlets, and write up guides to how they've been able to eek out some semblance of freedom from the tedium of the current dominance hierarchies.

Also, it would be cool to talk to old contributors who got this project to where it is today, so I'm listing lots of the old names and usernames here on the off chance it leads to an old user stumbling upon this page. Hence the silly title of this page...

Steal This Book Era

- Izak Haber shared the vision from the beginning. He did months of valuable research and contributed many of the survival techniques.
- Carole Ramer and Gus Reichbach of the New York Law Commune guided the book through its many stages.
- Anna Kaufman Moon did almost all the photographs.
- The cartoonists who have made contributions include Ski Williamson and Gilbert Sheldon.
- Tom Forcade, of the UPS, patiently did the editing.
- Bert Cohen of Concert Hall did the book's graphic design.
- Amber and John Wilcox set the type.
- Anita Hoffman and Lynn Borman helped me rewrite a number of sections.
- There are others who participated in the testing of many of the techniques demonstrated in the following pages and for obvious reasons have to remain anonymous. There were perhaps over 50 brothers and sisters who played particularly vital roles in the grand conspiracy.
- Some of the many others are listed on the following page.
